Provoking Productive
Teamwork

Generating Executive Team Swing

In a 2009 Waterstone survey of 500 senior executives, 88% identified the practices of the executive team as the most powerful influence on their organization's performance.

Your executive team is made up of highly-talented people skilled in the fields for which they are responsible. Its members are entrepreneurial, innovative, and influential individuals who profoundly shape the results your organization produces.

But are they being the best team possible?

Are they playing their best together and constantly strive to play above that?

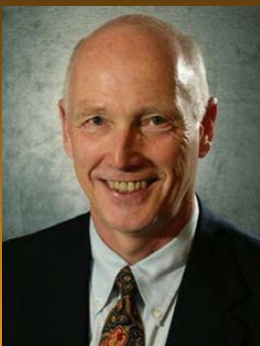

What kind of vibe is their collective performance creating in the organization?

Are they working like a great jazz group?

The most common form of jazz is ordinary conversation. Your executive team works together through conversations. So everyone on it is a jazz musician. Jazzthink's lead provocateur, Dr. Brian Fraser, along with a trio of Vancouver's finest jazz musicians, will explore with your executive team the lessons you can learn from jazz on working better together. The experience will change the way you collaborate in the service of your organization's success.

"Brian is truly what he claims to be — a provocateur! I am awestruck by his energy, commitment, competence and caring with everyone with whom I have seen him work. I do recommend Brian highly for any project that requires creativity, professionalism and immediate results."

Dr. Terry Anderson, University of the Fraser Valley
